Business knowledge Understands management concepts and appropriately applies them to demonstrate business knowledge. 15%	Demonstrates a comprehensive understanding of management theory, particularly managing communication, discussed in the lectures and prescribed readings, and applies the theories accurately. Identifies elements both explicit and implicit in the theories.	Demonstrates a very good understanding of management theory, particularly managing communication, discussed in the lectures and prescribed readings, and applies the theories accurately. Identifies elements both explicit and implicit in the theories. Occasional minor omissions or lack of clarity.	Demonstrates a good understanding of management theory, particularly managing communication, discussed in the lectures and prescribed readings, and mostly applies the theories accurately. Identifies elements arising explicitly from the theories. Some minor omissions or lack of clarity.	Demonstrates a sufficient understanding of management theory, particularly managing communication, discussed in the lectures and prescribed readings, and applies the concept without providing specific detail to demonstrate business knowledge. Identifies elements arising explicitly from the theories. Omissions and/or incorrect content in sections of the submission.	Demonstrates limited or no understanding of management theory, particularly managing communication, taught in the subject. Uses generic language or theories not covered in lectures/readings. Fails to explain or apply concepts accurately. Submission includes major errors, omissions, or irrelevant content.
Reflection Demonstrates an awareness of your own performance within a group environment, recognises your personal role, and develops a realistic action plan for future improvement. 30%	The reflection is exceptionally well-organised and demonstrates a deep understanding of the student's own performance, emotions, and their role within the group work environment. They critically evaluate their performance and the performance of their group, including specific examples of strengths and areas for improvement. The student's insights from the reflective process are effectively summarised in the conclusion. They not only recognise but also vividly demonstrate their awareness of their own performance and the personal role they play in improving their own work and the work of a team. The action plan for future improvement is clear, specific, actionable, measurable, relevant, time-specific and reflects their commitment to self-improvement.	The reflection is well-structured and shows a good understanding of the student's own performance and emotions in relation to their role within the group work environment. The evaluation of their performance and the performance of their group includes specific examples of strengths and areas for improvement. The conclusion effectively summarises significant insights gained. The student acknowledges and demonstrates their awareness of their own performance and their personal role in improving their own group work. The action plan is clear, specific, actionable, measurable, relevant, time-specific and reflects their commitment to self-improvement.	The reflection is adequately structured and demonstrates an understanding of the student's own performance and emotions in relation to their role within the group work environment. The evaluation of their performance and the performance of their group includes some specific examples of strengths and areas for improvement. The conclusion summarises some insights gained. The student recognises their awareness of their performance and their personal role in improving their own group work, even though it may lack some depth. The action plan is somewhat clear, specific, actionable, measurable, relevant, time-specific and reflects their commitment to self-improvement.	The reflection may lack clear structure and depth. The understanding of the student's own performance and emotions in relation to their role within the group work environment is limited. The evaluation of their own and the group's performance is superficial with few specific examples of strengths and areas for improvement. The conclusion lacks depth, and the student's recognition of their awareness of their performance and their personal role in improving their own group work may be limited. The action plan is somewhat vague but reflects some attempt at self-improvement.	The reflection is poorly structured and/or lacks depth and is generic. The understanding of the student's own performance and emotions in relation to their role within the group work environment is mostly absent. The evaluation of their own and the group's performance is very limited, with no specific examples of strengths and/or areas for improvement. The conclusion is unclear, and the student's recognition of their awareness of their performance and their personal role in improving their own group work is minimal. The action plan is either absent or poorly defined.
Critical thinking Establishes an evidence-based argument by coherently evaluating a range of information including primary evidence, different perspectives and systematically analysing your own and others' assumptions. 30%	Demonstrates sophisticated critical thinking by effectively integrating evidence from the group work experience, with clear and relevant examples provided in the appendices. Issues or problems are clearly articulated. Critically evaluates a range of expert viewpoints, identifying and analysing both personal and others' assumptions. Demonstrates awareness of complexity by acknowledging limitations to the position taken. Conclusions are logically derived, well-prioritised, and clearly supported by evidence and theories from lectures, tutorials, and the textbook.	Demonstrates strong critical thinking with relevant evidence from the group work experience and clear examples in the appendices. Issues are identified and viewpoints from experts are considered, with some critique and analysis of assumptions. Conclusions are logical and supported by theory, though there may be minor omissions, limited evaluation of complexity, or uneven prioritisation of key points. Meets the requirements of a High Distinction with some limitations in depth or consistency.	Describes the issues or problems, though with limited clarity or depth. Evaluates and critiques some expert viewpoints and identifies basic assumptions. Demonstrates some awareness of complexity by acknowledging alternative perspectives. Conclusions are generally logical and based on a range of relevant information, but may be inconsistently supported by theory. Evidence from the group experience is included but may be limited, poorly integrated, or only partially supported by the appendices.	Identifies issues or problems with basic description but limited clarity. Refers to one or two expert viewpoints with minimal critique. Some recognition of personal or group assumptions may be present but is not well developed. Little attempt is made to explore complexity or alternative perspectives. Conclusions are simplistic or generalised, with limited reference to theory. Evidence from the group experience is included but often vague, underdeveloped, or weakly linked to the analysis. Appendices are minimal and poorly integrated into the reflection.	Fails to clearly identify or describe the issues or problems. Shows little or no evaluation of expert viewpoints or theoretical perspectives. Assumptions are unacknowledged. Makes no attempt to explore complexity or other perspectives. Conclusions are unsupported or missing. Group experience is not used as evidence. Appendices are missing, irrelevant, or not referenced.
Communication Communicates effectively using a reflective essay writing style. 10%	Clear, precise, accessible reflective essay writing style that is always easy for the reader to follow. Uses the English language skillfully to communicate meaning to readers with few if any grammatical or spelling errors. Excellent formatting. Meets word limit requirements.	Superior reflective essay writing style. Meaning is clear. Uses the English language skillfully to communicate meaning to readers with minimal grammatical or spelling errors. Formatting generally good. Meets word limit requirements.	Reflective essay writing style is good but minor errors found and/or meaning may be obscure at times. Uses the English language in a manner that generally conveys meaning to readers with clarity, although writing may include some errors in syntax, word choice and/or mechanics. Formatting generally good. Might push boundaries of upper/lower word limit.	Reflective essay writing style is satisfactory, but at times may be difficult to follow. Uses the English language in a manner that generally conveys meaning to readers with clarity, although writing may include some errors in syntax, word choice and/or mechanics. Relatively frequent grammatical and spelling errors. Satisfactory formatting but need more attention to detail. Might exceed lower/upper word limits.	Writing style is weak and difficult to follow. Attempts to write in English but language choices impede meaning due to errors in syntax, word choice and/or mechanics. Informal, non-reflective essay writing style and language. Grammatical and/or spelling errors. Poor formatting or formatted incorrectly i.e. using bullet points or generic headings. Might be substantially below or above word limit.
Referencing Appropriate use of UOW Harvard Referencing style and applies relevant lecture material and academic sources. 15%	Excellent and consistent use of UOW Harvard in-text referencing and the development of a reference list without errors. Applies relevant lecture material and other academic sources in appropriate places within the paper.	Consistent use of UOW Harvard in-text referencing and the development of a reference list with few errors. Applies relevant lecture material and some other academic sources in appropriate places within the paper.	Uses UOW Harvard in-text referencing and develops a reference list but contains some errors. Applies some relevant lecture material in appropriate places within the paper.	Inconsistent use of UOW Harvard in-text referencing and the development of a reference list with multiple errors. Limited use of relevant lecture material within the paper. References are sourced the non-scholarly publications, or websites.	Demonstrates poor use of UOW Harvard referencing, with frequent and significant errors in in-text citations and/or the reference list. Referencing may be incomplete or omitted entirely. Sources used are predominantly non-scholarly or irrelevant, with heavy reliance on websites or inappropriate materials.

One area you performed well in this assessment was your strong analysis of leadership, groupthink, and how your directive leadership style unintentionally encouraged passive agreement. The key area for improvement is referencing, as the submission would be stronger with more consistent UOW Harvard formatting and more precise academic citation.
